By the mid-1750s, colonial governments had become an extension of the English government.

Courts enforced the common law of England.

The Governor's Council or the Governor's Court was a body of senior advisors to the governor.

The General Assembly was elected by the enfranchised voters; by 1750, most free men could vote.

In New England, the towns had annual town meetings where all free men had a voice.

Diplomatic affairs were handled by London, as were some trading policies. The colonies handled their own affairs (and wars) with the Native Americans, but Britain handled foreign wars with France and Spain.
